"The South 40" by JAMES A. SMITH EXTENSION AGENT

Drought stressed crops can be a signal of caution to livestock producers. This is especially true where large amounts of nitrogen have been applied. The danger is nitrate poisoning. We have no reliable test to recommend. Generally we've said that a nitrate level of 0.5% is toxic, yet we know that some animals can tolerate higher levels.

If you suspect the possibility of high levels of nitrate, feed some of the ration to a single animal. Preference should be given a small or young animal since they appear to be more susceptible. Don't full feed the animal the suspected ration - - feed it gradually.

Nitrate poisoning can be detected by labored breathing, staggering or panting.

Ensiling helps reduce the nitrate level but whether a silage is dangerous depends on how much nitrate was in the feed at the time of ensiling.

* * *

Dairymen and probably some beef producers need to increase their alfalfa acreage. After the first good rain in August is a good time to seed.

* * *

Feeder calf producers should be planning and preparing for the use of Orchardgrass - - Alfalfa or Orchardgrass - - - Clover pastures to creep graze calves. If you get it done this fall these areas will be ready to creep next summer.

As we've pointed out before, tall fescue along will reduce maximum potential growth of the calf crop.

* * *

Those using metal bins for storing grain are on the increase. Sometimes insect control is necessary. To show how stored grain insects should be controlled, we'll have a demonstration at the Richard T. Nash farm, Route 2, Appomattox, 9:00, Sept. 7. If you are using metal bins or plan to purchase one, you'll want to attend this program.

* * *

Home gardens can be improved by using Crimson Clover as a green manure crop to be turned under.

* * *

If you plan to seed Crimson Clover, August is the best time. Use ½ lb. per 1000 square feet.

* * *

Some calls are coming in about control of the blister beetle. This is a rectangular shaped black beetle with gray margins. They feed on the foliage of potatoes, tomatoes, and other plant material.

This insect carries a venomous substance throughout its body, especially in the blood. If this insect is crushed against the body a poison called cantharidin is released that is very painful.

Blister beetles can be controlled by using Malathion.

* * *

Some corn growers report heavy infestations of black birds in their fields. The best control we have to offer is the use of Avitrol treated corn at the rate of ½ to 1 lb. per acre.

* * *

101 bulls came into the Red House Bull Test Station last Wednesday. Dr. Tom Bibb was taking some blood samples and pointed out that a shot of 2 to 3 cc of vitamin A & D had demonstrated a marked improvement of eye conditions in cattle. This needs to be done twice a year - - spring and fall.

DE COORDINATOR ATTENDS WORKSHOP & CONFERENCE

VPI & SU and the Distributive Education Service, State Department of Education co-sponsored a two-week Writers' Workshop. The purpose of the workshop was to write competency based competive events for DECA (Distributive Education Clubs of Amerjca). These events are designed to relate directly to the new competency based instruction being implemented throughout the state's DE programs.

Jack Hutcheson , DE teacher-coordinator at Appomattox County High School, and 25 other coordinators, supervisors, and teacher educators from Virginia participated in the two-week workshop, July 19-30. The participants were involved in writing, editing, and validating the competencies to be tested, and the actual events themselves.

The first week of the workshop was held in Blacksburg. Most of the writing took place during this session. After the events had been written, the writers spent the second week in Roanoke. Here they worked closely with the merchants at Tanglewood Mall who helped in the Validation process.

Occupational update was a key factor in the second week's work. Mr. Hutcheson and his fellow writers toured an advertising agency, spent one morning with the regional display manager for Leggett stores, had some human relations training, and received information on new developments in computerized cash registers.

James Horan, State Supervisor for Distributive Education, attended the opening session. In his remarks to the writers he stated that "Virginia is taking a lead in the area of developing competency based events." He also told the group that through such activities as the workshop, Virginia will always remain a leader in Distributive Education throughout the nation.

After the workshop, Mr. Hutcheson attended the DE teachers' Summer Conference. The conference was held at the Sheraton Motor Inn, Military Circle Shopping Mall, in Norfolk. This was the first time any state conferences had been held in a shopping center.

The theme for this year's conference was "A Past to Remember . . . a Future to Mold." The theme reflected the current changes in distributive education from the old curriculum to the new instruction based on competencies that have been identified as necessary for those students seeking employment in marketing and distribution.

Mr. Hutcheson felt the conference was a tremendous success. Many new ideas were presented that will be beneficial to the DE program here in Appomattox as well as those in Virginia.
